Golden Paintbrush Recovery Internships

The Institute for Applied Ecology (<https://appliedeco.org/>) will hire up to two interns this year for field work focused on monitoring populations of the threatened golden paintbrush (Castilleja levisecta) in the Willamette Valley of Oregon. The interns will also have the opportunity to sample for Bradshaw's lomatium (Lomatium bradshawii), Kincaid's lupine (Lupinus oregonus), and Nelson's checkermallow (Sidalcea nelsoniana) in Benton County. These paid positions are intended to provide field experience to individuals considering conservation biology or restoration ecology as a career, while contributing directly to the conservation and recovery of rare species. The majority of time will be spent visiting sites where the species have been intentionally reintroduced and monitoring the populations to estimate the total population size. The work will involve walking, hiking, stooping, kneeling, carrying medium to light loads, recording data, entering data into computers, and other associated tasks. The positions are based in Corvallis, Oregon with field work throughout the Willamette Valley. These internships will be from April 15 through June 21, 2019.
